Marjorie Dorfman : A Taste of Funny before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised A Taste of Funny:

It was also nice how there were some interesting facts sprinkled throughout the book (ie. the info about eating flowers). My only gripe is there are a lot of different font sizes going on. The formatting also seems off in a couple areas. These don't really ruin the book, but just make it slightly harder to read.3

Not only did I find Ms. Dorfman to have a delightful sense of humor, the book is also filled with interesting and obscure facts regarding various foods. We learn about the "caveat emptor" (buyer beware) when purchasing bottled water. We learn how to avoid crying tears while peeling onions. I laughed out loud while reading the article about the giant lobster. The conclusion page notes that the articles are meant to amuse and distract from the stress of everyday life. Ms. Dorfman clearly accomplished her goal. Buy the book...you won't regret it. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Rodney Dangerfield meets Joan RiversBy Priscilla A. EstesA Taste of Funny had me chuckling so much in bed that I could hardly go to sleep. If Rodney Dangerfield (RIP) merged with Joan Rivers, a book like this would be the result. Dorfman weaves wisecracks (about vodka: "Hey, Mac, this spud's for you!") with knowledge (potatoes came from Peru, not Ireland--4,500 years ago) in a most entertaining fashion. A fun read; and a good gift, on its own or slipped into a gourmet basket. Would make a great hostess gift.

Humorous and well-researched articles presented on a platter of anecdotal material about your favorite foods and drinks.

About the AuthorStarting some twenty years ago as a short story writer of horror and ghostly fiction, Ms Dorfman has branched out into the worlds of journalism and humor. She publishes regularly in the Bristol Pilot and The Bucks County Herald and also maintains seven web sites offering well-researched articles on a wide variety of subjects ranging from general humor, food, drink and pop culture to the challenges of aging, maintaining a household and being a non-mechanical soul in a technological society. Her newest site, What's New, Emu?, expresses, in its own unique way, her love of all animals.
