About the Author Larry earned a BS in Electrical Engineering, with a minor in English. That might seem like an odd combination, but he's always enjoyed understanding how our language works. After his undergraduate degree, he earned an MS in Engineering and, years later, a Masters in General Counseling. Again, an interesting combination - engineering and counseling. Having played several instruments in his past, and now enjoying painting, he'd say that he's probably about a 50/50 right-brain / left-brain thinker. His experience has been quite diverse: from electronics engineer (to senior management) to starting his own commercial mortgage brokerage firm to founding DeltaPro Consultants, a management consulting firm. He has self-published four books on Goal-Setting, and Personal, Management, and Organizational Development. His latest venture is Affordable Editing Services (AES), which he co-founded with his wife Roberta Wennik, who has over seven published books of her own. AES provides authors with two major services, Writing Coaching and Editing. The company motto is "No author should be without an editor!"
