Paul Ruditis : A Very Klingon Khristmas (Star Trek) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised A Very Klingon Khristmas (Star Trek):

Seared Into My Klingon Heart By Adam Burkard I was so inspired by this book that I killed all of my enemies in glorious battle immediately after reading it! Admittedly, a tear was brought to my eye when the baby Kahless was given his first D'ktahg and the prophecy was foretold that he would be the one to vanquish Molor and unify the empire. Further in, I was flooded with memories of Khristmases long ago, when my father stuffed my stocking with toys taken from his slain enemies for being an honorable child while my brother was locked in his room with a stocking stuffed with a tribble and a morsel of bread for running away from a fight earlier that year. Ah, to be a young warrior again. !Qa'Pla! 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. "Today is a good day for pie!" By NiTE Owl People can cast a quizzical look, with my heartfelt yet blasphemous personal belief, that everything one needs to know to navigate life, can be learned through watching Star Trek. This extremely colorful, 36-page, 9.25" x 9.25" x 0.38" hardcover book only emboldens this philosophy. The "Look inside" option contained, gives you an idea of the overall layout, by quoting the poem's first three stanzas. From there we witness Klingon carolers praising Kahless, "in music and song", then on to Santa Qlas scanning his gift-giving list with "retractable claws". No more pure joy is there in life, than seeing a Klingon tike unwrap his first qutluch knife. "On, Ch' Tang! On, Ki' Tang! On, M' Char! And Slivin!" Up goes Santa's sleigh, powerfully drawn through the bitter black cosmos, by eight tiny Birds-of-Prey. "Some gagh and some racht" is best left as a snack, then the children can sneak-a-peak by the stairs, as his big sack gets unpacked. As Santa beams out, there comes an enlightening, that Tribbles are left, for those whose honor is lacking. But the brave Klingon lad, has “nothing to dread, from visions of evil that dance in their heads.” Armed with new toys, and out to play in the cold winter snow, decapitating many a pointy-eared snowman, fiercely they go. As evening descends, the noble houses do feast, on Jumja sticks Plomeek soup, and a fatten Targ is the holiday roast beast. The mood becomes lively, sweet Saurian brandy begins to flow, young Klingon couples “canoodle”, under poisonous clutches of Mistletoe. The evening is done, Santa’s mission fulfilled, with a shout of “Qapla!”, he warps swiftly from sight. And here ends my humble review, and you're definitely right, my poetry isn't worth a damn... “Happy Khristmas to all, and to all a maj ram!” 7 of 7 people found the following review helpful. Beautiful Book for a real fan By MarthaTori This is a beautifully done book. I expected it to be cute and bring a smile (or a growl), but really, the pictures are fantastic! Norman Rockwell meets bloodthirst, the expressions on the Klingons are so wonderful. Paul Ruditis is obviously a real fan of the Empire.

A hilarious, illustrated holiday gift book that celebrates the rich Klingon Christmas traditions—perfect for Star Trek fans everywhere. This hilarious parody firmly plants Klingons at the center of the Christmas story—where they rightly should be—including everything from a Santa equipped with retractable claws, tribbles in the stockings of naughty Klingon boys and girls, and the spirited holiday warmth of a hot cup of mulled blood wine. Illustrated in a classic Norman Rockwell-inspired style, A Very Klingon Khristmas is the perfect holiday gift for every Star Trek fan!
